SPECIAL:

1) Advanced targeting systems allow marines to target enemy units individually and still count as motivated. i.e. a 5 man squad of marines in YAG 1000 armour, can target up to 5 enemy units (1 marine firing at each unit) with all attacks being

"MOTIVATED". See KRYOMEK RULES 12.9

2) Twin gauss rifle counts as "gauss rifle" in the weapons table but has additional weapon bonus, twin S.M.G. counts as Sub-machine gun in the weapons table but has additional weapon bonus. See KRYOMEK RULES 11.11.

3) Exo-Gloves count as an additional weapon for close combat. i.e. +1 to "strike roll".

4) Marines with grenade launchers can fire them separately from their manual weapons but must target the same enemy unit.

PREDATOR BATTLE SUITS

The YAG series 400 and 500 Power armour had proved potent in the interdiction and light support roles. However the need for a manned medium weapons platform at squad level was realised as early as 3492 IST. Although the Mk 1 Talos chassis proved effective in search/destroy, close ground support roles, their inability to adapt to more complicated battlefield operations (such as Deep Strike operations, Med-Evac and Covert Recce) restricted their efficiency as a multi-role ordnance platform. What was needed was a heavier version of the YAG 500 with more advanced targeting systems and mission duration capability. Thus the YAG 100 was developed.

The now famous war myth of the defence of ridge 214 in the HEGADA campaign (3494 IST), although exaggerated over the years, is typical testimonies to this suits advanced target designation systems. Fact states that three squads of the QATAR recce cention (see box cover) managed to pin down wave upon wave of KRYOMEK for over three hours before a successful Evac was executed.
